World of Warcraft is arguably the most popular MMORPG in the planet. Of course, what else can you expect from one of the best games ever produced? Consider this: There are over 16 million MMORPG players in around the globe, 10 million of those are WoW players. That's over 66% of the world's online gamer population. If that doesn't prove how awesome World of Warcraft is, then I don't know what else can.

However, popularity can't always be a good thing for MMORPGs. Sure, you can be certain that you'll always have someone to talk to whenever you go online. But then again, with so many players, it's hard to get recognized and to reach the level of power and popularity you've dreamed of, especially when there's always someone rushing off to kill the monster you've been hoping to kill. Add that to the fact that you have other responsibilities in the "real world", and you can be doomed to n00bdom for the rest of your WoW life.

And in the world of MMORPGs, you have to be either extremely powerful or extremely rich to be a "somebody" in Azeroth. And in most cases, you have to be one in order to have the other and vice versa. Wealth precedes Power which precedes wealth, that's just the way of the world in WoW.

Fortunately, however, there is a way to escape n00bdom, and that's to become powerful and become rich in a matter of days. Impossible, you say? Not quite. There are people in the internet, expert WoW players, who are willing to lend you their expertise. All you need to do is to entrust your character unto them, ask for some WoW power leveling, and your character will be strong and rich in no time at all. These people know all where the best places to earn those excruciating exp points are. Indeed, they know the whole game inside out, and all you need to do when you get your character back is to mingle with the WoW elite and to pwn with your now-awesome character. wow power leveling is especially useful for people who have no time to play the game but have an extreme desire to excel both in the World of Warcraft universe and the real world.

However, if you're one of those people who want to make their characters strong personally, even if it means thousands of hours of monotonous hacking and slashing, then maybe you're just better off playing WoW gold. New players are sometimes doomed to just stare and drool over those places that give decent exp points. They have to make themselves content with just hacking through the weaker enemies that also give weaker exp points because they aren't strong enough to kill those monsters that give several exp points. But, really, what is the key to strength in an MMORPG but a few awesome equips and a good build? You can have the good build if you plan carefully, but for the equips, you need some wow gold.

And with a bit of wow powerleveling and some WoW gold, you'll be well on your way to being the best warrior in Azeroth in no time.
